

Welcome to Redwood

Descendants of a great forest of Sequoia sempervirens, commonly known as coast redwood, grow more than 100 feet tall in Redwood Regional Park in Oakland. The original stand stretched from Rancho de San Antonio, through the middle redwoods (in the vicinity of the current park) to El Rancho de Los Palos Colorados. These Spanish land grants were granted in 1820 and 1841, respectively.

The trees of the original forest served as landmarks for sea captains sailing into San Francisco Bay, as illustrated in the 1826 logs of the Royal Navy: "... in order to miss treacherous Blossom Rock between Alcatraz Island and San Francisco, one should line the northern tip of Yerba Buena Island with two trees south of Palos Colorados, over San Antonio, too conspicuous to be overlooked." The landmark trees would have been 16 miles from where the sailors entered the Golden Gate.

Commercial logging of the old-growth redwoods took place between 1840 and 1860. Prince Mill, Spicer Mill, Tupper and Hamilton Mill, and Egar and Brown Mill were in operation within the area that became Redwood Regional Park. Throughout the rest of the forest there were six additional mills. Shantytowns sprang up around the mills to house workers. The huge redwoods made it necessary to build platforms around the bases of trees to support the workers as they cut into the virgin wood.

The Alameda-Contra Costa county line traces the importance of the forest resource in 1853. When the citizenry split off the southern part of Contra Costa to gain more political influence in the state, they took great care to divide the redwood lands evenly between Contra Costa and the new county of Alameda.

Ranching followed the logging era and the land went into numerous holdings, with homesteads built along the streams. Grazing was a major activity, although there were some orchards and other crops grown.

HISTORICAL LANDMARK NO. 970 The naming of the rainbow trout species was based on fish taken from the San Leandro Creek drainage. Trout seen in Redwood Creek today are descendants of that pure strain of native trout. A historical marker is located a short distance inside the Redwood Gate park entrance off Redwood Road, just to the left of the entrance road. Because these fish are unique, and to allow for further research, FISHING IS NOT PERMITTED in Redwood Creek, either in the park or along Redwood Road.

RESOURCE PROTECTION AND DOGS DOGS MUST BE ON LEASH in the resource protection area. The creek in Redwood Regional Park has been designated a Resource Protection Area to enhance the habitat of the rainbow trout and the riparian community. This area includes the Stream and Bridle trails from Redwood Road north to Skyline Gate. Please keep your dog(s) on leash (6-foot maximum length) at all times. The vegetation that makes up the riparian corridor provides shade, food, and protection. The first step in enhancing trout habitat is restoring vegetation to the creek banks. To help with this vital restoration, please observe the following when in the Resource Protection Area along Redwood Creek and the Stream Trail:

- Stay on the defined trail.
- Keep dogs on leash.
- Clean up feces deposited by your dog(s).
- Keep out of the creek and off the creek banks.
