WATERSPORTS AT CONTRA LOMA Year-round fishing, windsurfing, and boating are the special attractions at this Contra Costa County oasis. The reservoir is open all year for these activities and more. The swim lagoon, staffed with lifeguards in the summer, has a sandy beach with changing rooms and a refreshment stand. Nearby are shady picnic areas on an expansive green lawn, accessible to the disabled.

All windsurfers must shower a minimum of two minutes prior to entering the reservoir, and wear at least a short wetsuit. Persons using float tubes must wear waders or other wetsuit material to eliminate body contact with the water in the reservoir.

SAVING PICNIC TABLES

Multiple first-come, first-served tables cannot be saved by a single person. One person is required per table to save non-reservable picnic tables.

People using sea kayaks that self bail must shower prior to entering the reservoir and wear at least a short wet suit. Other dry-type kayaks are permissible with the only restriction being no rollovers or other activities that cause body contact with the water. Visitors may launch their own boats. Private boaters may use electric motors, but not gasoline engines. Maximum allowable boat length is 20 feet. Coast Guard approved personal flotation devices are required for each person.

HISTORY Beneath the waters of the Contra Loma Reservoir lie mortar rocks, a reminder that this place was loved and cared for by Julpun people. The Julpun, who spoke the Bay Miwok language, knew and understood the landscape, plants, and animals intimately, including the grizzly bears, mountain lions, elk, antelope, and wolves with whom they shared this place.

The Julpun world was upended on April 3, 1776, when members of the Juan Bautista de Anza expedition passed through their lands. In March 1806, three Julpuns went with their Volvon neighbors to Mission San Francisco. With their choice to live as they had becoming increasingly constrained, from 1807 to 1827, the remaining Julpun went to Mission San Jose.

After the mission was secularized in 1836, some Julpun returned to their homeland, but under Mexican, then early American, governance, ranching soon became the norm, with native people the earliest labor force, along with working in the coal mines in 1860-1906 in the adjoining Black Diamond Mines Regional Preserve.

Today's Bay Miwoks work to protect ancestral places and heritage. The area's ranching heritage lives on in nearby valleys and hill lands. The bears, elk, antelope, and wolves are now gone, but coyotes, grey foxes, mule deer, and other smaller mammals are still common.

The Contra Loma reservoir is the wintering ground for many migratory waterfowl, and mourning doves and quail claim the hills as a permanent home.

By agreement, the waters of Contra Loma's 80-acre reservoir are maintained by the Contra Costa Water District. The surrounding lands, owned by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, are managed by the East Bay Regional Park District.
